Apple Launches New MacBook Pro, AirPods 3, and More!

The holiday season is just around the corner and Apple ($APPL) has finally dropped their latest new products in a recent virtual event.

The lineup includes two high-end MacBook Pro laptops — a 14 inch and 16 inch model — featuring new M1 Pro and M1 Max processors, sleeker bezels, improved displays, and longer-lasting batteries.

However, a surprising and exciting update is that the company is bringing back ports to the devices. Both models will have an HDMI port, three Thunderbolt 4 ports, an SDXC card slot, a high-impedance headphone jack, and MagSafe.

Apple has also apparently said good-bye to the digital Touch Bar and replaced it with physical keys — returning to a more tactile feel. Instead, the MacBooks will include a fingerprint sensor that will allow users to lock and unlock.

In addition, the new revamped AirPods 3 will have new audio drivers, longer battery life, and sweat and water resistance. Music fanatics and gym-goers can finally rejoice with these improved updates!

More bonus surprises include:

- Apple Music voice plan with Siri integration.
- New colorful HomePod Minis.
- New features coming to macOS Monterey that will be available for download on October 25th.

China's Energy Crisis: The Effects on Apple, Tesla, and the Chinese Economy

Apparently, the global economy can't take a break as another crisis tightens its stranglehold and threatens halts in supply chains, slower factory production, and more.

China has set strict standards in attempt to cut emissions and as a result, many major factories are being forced to reduce their hours or halt their productions altogether.

Many regions are also missing their energy consumption targets as homes and businesses alike are at risk of struggling due to the rising demand for energy and natural gas.

In addition, major companies including Apple, Tesla, and other S&P 500 companies are experiencing an irregular production outlook and can expect to have delays in manufacturing. Not to mention, Covid-related restrictions have not made it any easier.
